MOKENA GARDEN CLUB NEWS AND NOTES

The following letter has been received by Mrs. Albert Braun, president of the Mokena Garden Club regarding work of the Plant, Flower and Fruit Guild:

"My Dear Mrs. Braun: It has been decided to inaugurate 'Lilac Week' on Friday, May 15th. The Plant, Flower and Fruit Guild's 1931 season will therefore begin officially on that day.

The booth at LaSalle Station will be open May 15th and 16th. If the Lilacs are not out then, the booth will be open on Wednesday May 20th the regular day.

Will you please talk about the work of the Guild and make plans for sending in your flowers and vegetables on Wednesdays? Will you also interest the young people and school children as you did last year, in helping to give cheer to the poor kiddies in Chicago's poor districts?

You know we want to enlist every one in this work, not only Garden and Woman's clubs, but everyone in the community. If everyone would plant a few extra packets of seeds, it would help.

We will make arrangements with the railroad again so that you can put boxes of flowers and vegetables on the train.

I am inclosing a letter containing a brief statement of the history, purposes and operations of the Guild and I shall be glad also to supply any additional information that you might desire and would be glad to appear before your Club to tell of the Guild's work, if you so desire.

Please advertise the work of the Guild in your local paper. I forgot to say that The Fair Store is giving us the use of a truck this year in which to deliver our flowers and vegetables. Isn't that fine?

I am hoping that we, along the Rock Island, can do much more this season than last, though I am proud of the work you all did last year.

Most Sincerely,
(Mrs. H. E.) Margaret C. Wulfinz

Orland Band Concert Big Hit

The Orland Park Community band put on their second band concert at the Orland Park M. E. church last Friday night to a packed house.

The band has improved wonderfully since their first concert which was considered very good. The band played many of the most difficult band numbers as seasoned players and this program went over big with a keenly appreciative audience.

The band is certainly a wonderful asset to Orland Park. Much credit is due Peter S. DeRobertis, the director for the excellent work he has accomplished with the band.

RUBBISH AND JUNK SPOIL SCENERY ALONG MANY HIGHWAYS

The public highways in both Will and Cook counties have been and are being disgraced by unsightly heaps of rubbish dumped along the highways or on property adjacent thereto. Take the old gravel pit south of Mokena. This pit is close to the Wolf road and it certainly presents a very untidy appearance by heaps of rubbish which disfigures the countryside surrounding. A wreck of an auto has been dumped close to the highway on the south part of Wolf road along the Cleveland farm. This wreck so close to the highway that it is a menace to auto drivers who happen to drive toward the edge of the road.

Take the highway running east of Tinley Park to Oak Forest is another disgraceful sight with its big heaps of junk and rubbish dumped in the ditch and alongside the road. This unsightly mess presents a very bad appearance when seen from passing Rock Island passenger trains. Of course these communities have a difficult time trying to dispose of rubbish and junk, but it could at least be covered up and not be left an unsightly mess for public view. Help beautify the countryside in stead of marring it. Read the public notice of the Orland township highway commissioner on this matter appearing on this page.

It is presumed the fireman smothered to death in the cave-like formation of coal.

ORLAND LEGION TO BACK POPPY DAY DRIVE

The Saturday before Decoration Day May 23rd is set aside by the American Legion as Poppy Day. At that time poppies will be on sale in all of the communities in this section.

The poppies are made by disabled war veterans in the government hospitals. They are paid for making them and about $5000.00 is made by them in this way.

The money derived from the sale of the poppies is used for the service and relief work of the Legion for the disabled men and their families. The Department of Illinois of the National Legion maintains the largest service department of any state in the union. In 1930 the service department expended $57,970 for relief and the income from poppy day was $43,499.76 thus the department spent $14,480 more than was received from last poppy day.

The work done by the service department is of the character not being furnished by the government, such as caring for the family of the needy veteran, supplying the necessary food, clothes or rent that cannot be supplied otherwise and taking care of the man in the hospital in things that the government will not care for.

Commander Schussler of the Orland Park Legion Post feels that this is a very worthy cause and deserves that we sell a thousand poppies in our district and make at least $300 from the sale.

The poppies cost the Post five cents apiece which money goes to the veterans who make them. There is no set price for the poppies as each person may give any amount they please. However, we should remember that all above five cents goes to the direct relief of needy veterans. We should remember the dead on Decoration Day but let us not forget the living who are in need and take this opportunity to help them.

Rev. Paul Sanders, chairman of this work for the Orland Post will announce the committee and official solicitors for each community in the next issue of this paper.

Geo. Lauffer Loses Case against Mrs. L. G. Bruder of Mokena

A jury in the Will County circuit court last Friday afternoon found Mrs. L. G. Bruder of Mokena not guilty of the malicious prosecution charge brought by George Lauffer of Grant Park, as an aftermath of the Lauffer matrimonial feud that has been fought in the courts since 1929.

The wife of Lauffer, plaintiff in the suit finished Friday, obtained a divorce from him and later married Alburn Steele of Mokena, once a hired man on the Lauffer farm.

Several controversies have arisen since the divorce over the custody of the children, Adelaide and Alice Lauffer and the case in court last week was the outgrowth of these.

Mrs. Steele had custody of the children and Lauffer was given the right of visitation. Upon one occasion he failed to find the children and went to the home of Mrs. Bruder, a friend of Mrs. Steele. She had been given the charge of the 2 girls by Mrs. Steele.

Mrs. Bruder charged that he kidnapped them from her and brought this charge to the court of Justice of the Peace, John Schultz of Mokena, having Lauffer arrested. Lauffer was confined to jail for a time before bonds were arranged and found the charge had been dropped when he appeared for the hearing in his case.

Lauffer then proceeded to bring the charges of malicious prosecution heard in the circuit court at Joliet and asked damages of $10,000. The jury sitting in the case decided that Mrs. Bruder was not guilty of the charge.

Another damage case arising from the matrimonial controversy is scheduled for the May term of court, a $25,000 damage suit brought by Mr. Steele against Lauffer, in which he charges false arrest.

It is stated in the bill that Steele was arrested on a charge of kidnapping the children from the Lauffer home a short time after they were taken from Mrs. Bruder. The case against Steele was dismissed by the state's attorney of Kankakee county, but Steele says his name and credit have been damaged to the extent of $25,000.

Attorney Albert Krusemark represented Lauffer and attorney Frank Brummund was the counsel for Mrs. Bruder at the trial Friday last.

Notice is hereby given that it is a violation of the state law for any person to deposit on or along a public highway, any trash, garbage, broken bottles, glass or any other offensive rubbish and any person so offending shall be liable to a penalty.

S. W. Highway Not To Be Built Before World's Fair

Two weeks ago a committee of the Southwest Towns Chamber of Commerce went to Springfield and met with Senators Barr, Huebsch and Representative Foster and Governor Louis L. Emmerson.

Senator Barr very kindly explained that it would be impossible to build the Southwest Highway immediately. The Highway Department must complete the roads that have been started and provided for in 2 bond issues before they will build any other roads.

Governor Emmerson also stated that since the program for the building of roads had been laid out in the two bond issues it would not be conducive to the best interests of the state to change its program. Therefore, the Southwest highway will not be built before the World's Fair.

Senator Barr, has however, introduced a bill in the Legislature even though he does not urge its passage; since the administration is against the immediate paving of the gap on the Southwest Highway between Marley and Saunemin, the introduction of the bill into the legislature will aid in the movement to complete the Southwest Highway in the not far off future.

The completion of this gap between Marley and Saunemin along the old Wabash right of way will be included in the next state road program.

The widening of highways outside of the Chicago area to forty foot super highways has not as yet been considered by the State Highway Department. Before they would widen Route 4 south of Joliet they will carefully consider the completion of a highway along the Wabash railroad as a remedy to relieve the congested traffic on Route 4.

The boosters for the Southwest Highway will have to content themselves for the present with the promises of the Chief Executive of the state together with the promises of Senators Barr and Huebsch. These men promise the citizens that the gap in the Southwest Highway between the towns of Marley and Saunemin will be completed at the earliest possible moment.

MARLEY BROTHERHOOD TO PRESENT PROGRAM

On Friday evening, May 22nd the Marley Men's Brotherhood will present in the Marley Church, Carlton King "The English Court Magician". Mr. King is a magician of world wide reputation. He has appeared before the Royal family of England, H. R. H. the Duke of York; the Duke and Duchess of Devonshire; the Duke and Duchess of New Castle and many other of England's nobility. The same act that he will present in the Marley church has been presented in the Alhambra theatre, Paris; Queen's Hall, London; Variety theatre, Brussels; Winter Garden, Blackpool, England and other European theatres. Carlton King says of his own entertainment that it is a "clean, clever comedy conception, combining conjuring curiosities with conversational confabulation and conviviality, calculated to capture the compliments". Those who have seen Mr. King in one of his performances declare that he has not over-estimated his ability. Mr. King carries with him approximately 800 pounds of equipment and his repertoire consists of refined humorous mysteries, quasi-scientific problems, psychological experiments and thought transference phenomena. Proceeds of the evening's activity will be used for church purposes. The public is invited to attend.

Shanahan in the house of representatives, as he and Speaker Shanahan both served there together as members of the last constitutional convention. Assistant Attorney General William E. The present law does not give county collectors power to extend the time for collection of taxes beyond May 1. Attorney General Oscar E. Carlstrom has informed State's Attorney Joseph E. Barnes, of Mason county. His opinion states that, if the house bill introduced by Representative William H. Jackson, of Toulon, which passed the house and is now before the senate, becomes a law it will change the time of making application for judgment on delinquent taxes from May to September. It contains an emergency clause that will put it in force immediately after it is passed and signed by the governor.

The appointment of Fox Hughes of Herrin, vice president of the United Mine Workers, as a member of the state mining investigation commission to succeed George Mercer of Canton, resigned, was sent to the senate by Gov. Louis L. Emmerson for confirmation.

The fifty thousandth test in the state water laboratory since it began work in 1917, was made on a sample of Springfield city drinking water, taken from an ordinary fountain in the state house. The analysis showed the water to be of excellent sanitary quality and safe for drinking. The laboratory makes analysis of samples of water, sewage, streams, swimming pools and ice all over the state at the rate of 700 a month.

Selective breeding is also bringing about a gradual improvement in the quality of animals that the state maintains.

Inaugurated 18 months ago, the prison schools at the state penitentiary, Stateville, and Woman's prison now have an enrollment of 386 pupils, with 20 inmate instructors in charge of the classes. Of these pupils, 278 are native born and 108 of foreign birth. One of the pupils was a schoolmaster himself for 20 years in Kwang Tung, China, and another is a negro ex-slave who was freed by the emancipation proclamation. Huebsch has introduced senate bill No. 547, which, among other things, would appear to change the corporation law of this state in the following respects: It gives corporations unlimited power to acquire and deal in real estate, and unlimited power to acquire stock in other corporations. It dispenses with the oath in the organization of corporations and permits corporations to be organized without the payment of any of the capital stock, prior to the issuing of certificate of incorporation. Under its provisions corporations may be organized so as to prohibit certain classes of stockholders from voting at any corporate meetings except for the election of directors. It relieves certain corporations which now are filing reports in the office of the secretary of state and paying franchise taxes from doing so. It removes the restriction of the minimum amount for which par stock may be issued, or no par value stock sold, and otherwise changes the policy in Illinois relating to such matters, which has existed for years.

An effort is being made to obtain an appropriation which will make it possible to hold the 1933 national encampment of the G. A. R. in an Illinois city. A bill originally introduced by Senator A. S. Lesson for May 17

JESUS ENTERS JERUSALEM AS KING

LESSON TEXT—Luke 19:29-48.
GOLDEN TEXT—These shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them: for he is Lord of lords, and King of kings; and they that are with him are called, and chosen, and faithful.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Teaches the People That He Is King.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Teaches the People That He Is King.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Loyalty to the King.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Supremacy of Jesus.

This event is frequently designated as the "triumphal entry" which is somewhat misleading. While it was his official entry into Jerusalem, it was far from being a triumphal entry. In fulfillment of prophecy the Messiah officially presented himself to the Jewish nation. It seems that back of the cry "Hosanna" was taking form the awful word "crucify." It is possible that the word "crucify" was uttered by some of the same persons who had cried "Hosanna." Though they were utterly blind to the fact, God was about to carry out his plan of Hosanna which means "save now" through the crucifixion of his son.

I. The Preparation (vv. 29-34).

1. Sending the disciples for the ass (vv. 29-30).
He told them just where to go to find it, and how to answer the inquiry of the one who owned it. This shows how perfectly the Lord knows all our ways.

2. The fulfillment of prophecy (Zech. 9: 9, Cf. Matt. 21: 4, 5).

Some five hundred years before, Zechariah had predicted this event. Christ's entry into Jerusalem was an exact fulfillment of this prediction. This is highly instructive to those who would understand the as yet unfulfilled prophecies. Since the predictions of his first coming were literally fulfilled, we can expect the second to be literally fulfilled also. The first is established beyond a doubt. The second we should as heartily believe. The prediction of Zechariah 14: 3-11 will be just as literally fulfilled as that of Zechariah 9: 9.

3. Obedience of the disciples (vv. 32-34).

The request may have seemed strange and even unreasonable, yet they fully obeyed. The true disciple will render glad obedience to the Lord, no matter how strange his commands may seem. Obedience to that only which seems reasonable is not obedience at all. May we prove that we are really his disciples by obeying him.

II. The Entry of the King (vv. 35-38).

1. The disciples set Jesus upon the ass (v. 35).
This act of putting the garments upon the ass and setting Jesus upon it showed that they recognized him as their king (II Kings 9:13).

2. Acclaimed as king by the disciples (vv. 36-38).

Some spread their garments in the way, others perhaps having no garments to spare cut down branches of trees and strewed them in his way. This, no doubt, was just as acceptable to him. They praised God for all the mighty works which they had seen.

III. The Critical Pharisees (vv. 39, 40).

Although swept along by the demonstrations of the multitude, the Pharisees deemed it prudent to ask the Lord to rebuke the disciples, as such behaviour might be interpreted by the Roman government as an insurrection. To their demand Jesus replied that such homage was not only fitting but necessary. He declared that if the multitude were silent, the very stones would cry out.

IV.—The King Rejected (vv. 41-44).

Christ knew what awaited him in Jerusalem. Though surrounded by loyal hearts, he knew that the rulers of the nation had no heart for him. His coming trial and death loomed before him so that he wept over Jerusalem. He knew what awful days awaited it and that loyal hearts would gladly welcome him if they only knew. He showed them that their inability to see him as their King and Saviour would result in bringing upon them the destruction of their city.

V. The King Taking Possession of His Own House (vv. 45-48).

Upon entering the city he rebuked the rulers for allowing the house of God to become degraded by carrying on traffic therein for gain. The cleansing of the temple only increased their hatred and opposition to him. The chief priests and scribes even sought his destruction.

Christian Service

There is something deadly in Christian service, where "the excellency of the power" is of us and not of God. The tragedy in so many lives is here; they have no adequate power house, and when they are confronted with a supremely difficult task they fail to cope with it and are disastrously overwhelmed.—Jowett.

SOME TESTED GOOD THINGS

There is an old saying that "an apple a day keeps the doctor away," and an onion a day keeps everybody away. A good time to indulge in the odoriferous bulb is at a time when you will not annoy others. Onions are such wholesome vegetables that they should be served at least twice a week in some form during the entire winter. An onion sirup cannot be excelled for a cough, and a poultice of chopped raw onion, mixed with rye flour with a bit of vinegar to moisten, makes a remedy for any lung trouble. This is not pleasant, but it is very effective.

Baked Stuffed Onions.—This makes a most satisfying main dish. Peel and cook the onions in boiling salted water for ten minutes. Take out the centers, drain well. Parboil a small green pepper and remove the seeds, peel 12 large mushroom caps, cook in three tablespoonfuls of butter with the onion scooped from the centers, finely chopped. Add one-half cupful of bread crumbs, salt, pepper and a tablespoonful of butter; mix well. Fill six medium-sized onions and top each with a mushroom cap. Put into a baking dish with a little water, cover and bake in a moderate oven about one hour. Remove the cover the last 15 minutes and brown. They are delicious without mushrooms, or with a bit of sausage.

Lemon Pudding.—Mix one cupful of flour, two egg yolks well beaten, one lemon, juice and rind, one teaspoonful of melted butter, and one cupful of milk. When well blended fold in the well-beaten whites of the eggs and bake in a shallow baking dish set into hot water. Bake three minutes. Serve hot or cold.

Walnut and Salmon Salad.—Separate into flakes one-fourth of a cupful of canned salmon. Take one-half cupful of walnut meats coarsely chopped. Shred three-fourths of a cupful of cabbage, let stand in cold water to crisp. Drain, mix with the salmon and nuts, add one cupful of cooked salad dressing and serve on lettuce and you have something good.

Islands Now American

Wake island was acquired by the United States in 1898, as a result of the Spanish-American war, and was ceded to this country by Spain under the treaty of Paris, which ended the war. Midway islands are now a part of the Hawaiian group, and under the jurisdiction of the Hawaiian government. They were discovered by Capt. U. C. Brooks in the ship Gambier on July 5, 1859, and officially taken possession of in the name of the United States on August 28, 1867, by Captain Reynolds of the U. S. S. Lackawanna. Baker island was taken possession of in the name of the United States in 1839 by an American named Michael Baker, who first discovered it in 1832. Howland island was discovered by George E. Nether in 1842, and officially possessed in the name of the United States in 1857.

Alaska's Old Capital

Sitka, Alaska, was the old Russian capital of Russian Alaska, and remained the capital of the new territory of Alaska when the Americans took possession on October 18, 1867. There was very little government in Alaska for some time after its acquisition, and it was not until the act of August 24, 1912, that the territory was organized and the capital officially established at Juneau.

Woman's Words

How's your vocabulary? Prof. Henry M. Robinson of the American Magazine has figured out that the average girl with a grade school education uses between 1,200 and 2,000 words. With a high-school education she possesses 3,000 to 4,000. After a college education she commands anywhere from 5,000 to 12,000. Shakespeare, in his plays, employed 24,000 different words.

Water for Goldfish

A temperature between 50 and 80 degrees is best for goldfish. Avoid any sudden change in temperature. If water is above 85 degrees in summer watch the fish and if they seem distressed reduce the number of fish in each aquarium and be sure the water is aerated. Do not put ice in the water. Cooled water may be fed in gradually if temperature is dangerously high.

Commemorative Stamps

The number of commemorative stamps to be issued is specified by the Post Office department. The number is not always the same, as there is a greater demand for certain types of commemorative stamps.

Government's Good Work

Five million dollars is devoted annually by the United States government to the investigation and improvement of new strains of fruits and grains.

THE TRUTH OF THE MATTER!

There are now before the various State Legislatures certain bills having for their purpose the proper regulation of commercial trucks and buses which operate for hire over the public highways. THESE measures do not in any way affect the privately-owned motor vehicles which do not carry merchandise or passengers for hire.

The proposed legislation is directed solely toward commercial vehicles that operate for hire, which are daily increasing in number, and size, to the extent that private automobiles are endangered and destruction of the highways, seriously threatened. Such vehicles, operated for hire, pay comparatively little for the valuable privilege of using these highways, from the operation of which the owners are reaping their reward at public expense. It is to correct this unfair and uneconomic condition that the present appeal for proper and effective legislation is made—a condition in which the public should have a very keen and definite interest.

Public interest demands the preservation of the highways on which millions of dollars of public money have been spent, that the citizens may enjoy in safety the benefits of automobile travel. If these highways are to be used as a direct means for selling transportation for the private profit of truck and bus operators, the owners of these vehicles should pay for the use of these right-of-ways, and be required to operate them under proper regulations.

Otherwise, the public will be confronted with a continuously mounting bill for highway maintenance and the necessity for increased taxation of some sort to meet this added expense.

Public records before the I. C. C. and the Bureau of Roads—U. S. Department of Agriculture, show that motor vehicles for hire, pay but a small percent of the cost of the highway facilities furnished by the public and from which these buses and trucks benefit.

Recent compilations made in one Middle Western state for 1929, show the total cost for highways is placed at $64,265,892. License fees and gas tax from all classes of motor vehicles, including privately-owned automobiles, for that year in that state was $28,747,000, leaving $35,518,892 to be contributed from other sources and necessary to provide highways if used by trucks and buses.

Romantic Story of Girl Singer Conoco Radio Feature

A romantic story of a girl who sang "just for the fun of it", was overheard singing for a group of friends at a party by a radio executive and immediately given a contract for radio work is that of Audrey Marsh.

This little lady—she's barely out of her teens—was a successful actress becoming a radio entertainer, one of her stage appearances being in the part of "Rosemary" in "Abie's Irish Rose".

She is also entitled to some sort of fame by being one of those rare individuals—a native New Yorker. Her parents were both musical and she could sing before she could either walk or talk; at least, that's the story they tell of her.

Miss Marsh will be the guest artist for the next Conoco Listeners' Hour. Peggy and Pat have announced. Another feature will be a pipe organ solo, for which there have been many requests, by George Shackley, director of the Conoco orchestra. The orchestra and the Rondoliers will also be heard on the program.

Farmers To See How Proper Soil Treatment Pays

Soil treatments which have added as much as $8.51 an acre a year to crop values will be featured in a meeting which the College of Agriculture, University of Illinois will hold for farmers on its soil experiment field at Joliet, starting at 1:30 p. m., Friday, May 29.

Representatives from the college will be at the meeting to explain the experiments and show how the results can be used in better paying farming. The meeting will be open to all farmers and other interested persons.

During the past rotation on the field, manure has added $4.84, phosphate $8.51 and potash $4 an acre a year to the value of crops. Capitalized at 5 per cent, the land on the field has a net value ranging from $94 to $190 an acre, depending upon the soil treatment.

Crops grown on the field include corn, oats, wheat alfalfa, hay mixtures, barley and sweet clover in several different rotation combinations. Treatments used on the field include the plowing down of manure and sweet clover and the use of limestone, phosphate and potash. One experiment compares different phosphatic fertilizers and also different rates of applying rock phosphate.

A STORY OF PRIVATE INITIATIVE AND LOCAL CAPITAL

"THE LAKE COUNTY EXPERIMENT"

TWENTY-ONE YEARS ago a group of public utility pioneers headed by Mr. Samuel Insull began an experiment in northern Illinois. Their laboratory was Lake County. Their materials were twenty-two towns scattered along the lake shore north of Chicago.

Many of these communities numbered no more than 300 families. Twelve of them had no electric service of any kind. The other ten had electric service of a sort. Service began at five o'clock in the evening—six hours later it stopped. Generating plants were locally owned and financed. They were located in makeshift buildings and coal was stoked by hand. When the weather was bad, customers got out their oil lamps. They knew better than to expect electricity.

It was the aim of the public utility pioneers to supply a higher type of service by centralizing the production of electricity required by these towns. They wanted not only to improve the service rendered the ten communities already receiving electricity. They wanted also to extend service to the twelve communities that had no service of any kind.

Extreme measures were adopted. The ten neighborhood electric plants that had been supplying ten of the towns were purchased. They were abandoned within a short time. To replace them, what was then a gigantic new electric plant had been erected near Lake Michigan. Tons of copper wire were strung on wooden poles to carry the current from the central electric plant to the twenty-two communities. Little substations were built along the way. It was a costly undertaking. Most people shook their heads and predicted failure.

But here is what happened: Within two years, the ten villages that had formerly been getting six-hour service—as well as all but two of the other twelve towns that had had no service of any kind—were receiving electricity twenty-four hours a day. Up to the attic went the old oil lamps.

During these same two years, the users of electricity doubled. And because of quantity production, fuel costs at the generating station were lowered 70%. Other operating costs were reduced 84%. Customers received electricity at lower rates than ever before. More important still, there was money to pay interest on new capital for bettering service and expanding facilities.

The success of this Lake County Experiment demonstrated new electric light and power possibilities in suburban and rural areas. To repeat the original experiment on a grander scale, four relatively small electric and gas companies in northern Illinois combined in August, 1911, to form the Public Service Company of Northern Illinois. During the next few years, 18 additional locally-managed utility companies merged with it. The haphazard part-time service they had been supplying became reliable twenty-four hour service. Rates were lowered several times.

How the Lake County Experiment led to the development of a "superpower network" in northern Illinois and the extension of electric service to an ever-widening area will be told in next week's story.

Like Coffee . . . the best Gasoline is Blended

THE sun beams cheerfully through an eastern window. The subtle fragrance of the morning coffee adds zest to the morning air, advance notice of the joy to come as you give the "cup test" to the coffee blend of your choice. Coffee roasting is important, of course, but the most skillful roaster cannot make a popular coffee from just one type of coffee bean.

The coffee connoisseur would not deign to drink coffee made from a single type of bean. Neither should the thoughtful motorist allow an unblended gasoline to go into his fuel tank. Gasoline must be blended if it is to possess all the vital properties contained in the three types of gasoline.

CONOCO Gasoline is blended, just as carefully as the finest coffee.

In CONOCO blended gasoline you'll find: Natural Gasoline, for quick starting; Straight-run Gasoline, for power and long mileage; Cracked Gasoline, for its anti-knock qualities. Motorists are fast learning that this is so. The result is a fast increasing group of gasoline connoisseurs who have added to their knowledge of the good things of life the fact that good gasoline must be blended.

The CONOCO Red Triangle marks the spots where CONOCO Blended Gasoline may be found. Try it today.

THE STORY

With his English wife, Catherine, and son, Jeems, Henry Bulain, French settler in Canada in 1749, cultivates a farm adjacent to the Tonteur seigneurie. As the story opens the Bulains are returning from a visit to the Tonteurs. Catherine's wandering brother, Hepsibah, meets them with presents for the family. To Jeems he gives a pistol, bidding him perfect himself in marksmanship. Jeems fights with Paul Tache, cousin of Toinette Tonteur, whom they both adore. Next day Jeems calls at the Tonteur home and apologizes for brawling in front of Toinette. The Tonteurs go to Quebec. Four years pass. War between Britain and France flares. Jeems returns from a hunt to find his home burned and his father and mother slain. He goes to the seigneurie and finds the manor destroyed and Tonteur and his servants dead. Believing him an enemy, Toinette wounds Jeems and denounces him as an Englishman.

Jeems scarcely knew he spoke the words. They rang back through the years as if a ghost had come to life whose memory they had played out of their hearts a long time ago.

"What are you doing here?" she demanded.

She might have asked that same question in those unimportant years when he had dared to visit Tonteur manor with his foolish gifts. Why was he here? He turned in the direction from which he had come and held out his hand, not for her to take, but as a voice. She understood what his burden had been. Tears? Such trivial things could not exist in the after-heat of the holocaust that had consumed them. Pride, defying grief, raised her chin a little as she obeyed Jeems. She knew to what she was going. And when she came to the place which Jeems had prepared, she was like a white angel who had appeared to gaze for a moment or two upon the dead.

With a tool he had found, Jeems had made a grave. It was shallow and made less unbecomingly with a bed of golden grass. Tonteur did not seem unhappy as he lay upon it. The top of his head was covered so Toinette could not see. She knelt and prayed, and Jeems drew back, feeling that to kneel with her, with the marks of her hatred on his face and body, would be sacrilege.

Even now, when it should have known better, the mill wheel continued to whine and scream, and suddenly it occurred to Jeems that it could not have been that way yesterday when Tonteur was alive. A devil must have come to abide at the top of the mill!

He waited, scanning the horizons that were thinning of their smoke. Death had passed and death might return over its own blackened trail. Toinette, beside her father, made him think of that. It seemed a long time before she rose to face him. She was not crying. Her eyes were blue stars in a countenance as pale as marble. The sun shone on her and gave an unearthly radiance to her hair. Her beauty held him stricken just as his own terriblest forced from her a gasp of protest when he drew off the coat borrowed from one of the dead men and spread it over Tonteur. But she did not speak. Only the mill wheel continued its virulent plaint as the loose earth fell on the baron. Toinette looked steadily toward the sky, and when Jeems was done she accompanied him back to the mill. She watched him go for his bow, where he saw that the form he had thought was Toinette was the wife of Peter the Younger.

He came back and spoke to her a second time. The lips she had broken with the musket barrel were swollen, and the brand across his forehead was turning a dark and angry color. The cloth he had twisted about his wounded arm was red. Sickness and pain were forcing their way into his eyes.

"I must take you away," he said. "There is not time to care for the others. If they come back—"

"They will not harm you," she said.

Jeems made no answer but looked away over the Richelieu toward Champlain and Dieskau.

"And they will not harm your father or your mother or anything that belongs to the Bulains, but will reward them for their loyalty to murder and outrage. Is not that true?"

Still Jeems did not answer, but stood listening for sound to come out of the distance.

She saw the sickness gathering in his face and eyes, but pity for him was as dead in her breast as her desire to live. She knew where he would take her. To his home—a place left unscathed by the killers. To his mother, the soft and pretty woman in whom her father had believed so faithfully. To Henri Bulain, the traitor, who had bartered his honor for an English woman. Over her father's hill, in Forbidden valley, were safety and mercy at the hands of her country's enemies.

Her lips found a way to cut him deeper.

"Your father and mother are waiting for you," she said. "Go, and leave me here. I prefer to wait for the return of your Indian friends. And I am not sorry because I tried to kill you!"

He moved away from her to where Hebert and Juchereau and the simple-minded Raudot lay on the ground. This time it was the idiot's coat he took, a fine coat made by the idiot's mother. The boy had loved birds and flowers, and on the lapel of the coat was a faded geranium bloom. Jeems took it off and tucked it between the dead lad's fingers.

Then he went back to Toinette and said, "We had better go." After that he added, "I am sorry, but I must go to my mother and father first."

He staggered as he set out, and Tonteur hill dipped and wobbled before his eyes. There was an ache like a splinter twisting in his head, and as she followed him, Toinette could see the effect of her unresisted blows with the iron gun barrel. For she did follow, out of the smoke fumes into the clearer air of the meadows and across them to the worn path that led to the Indian trail and the home of Catherine Bulain.

"They're down there," said Jeems, and pointed, speaking to Odd more than to her.

He took the hatchet from his belt and carried it in his hand. They entered the greater stillness of the Big forest, and Odd, who had traveled between them, dropped back to Toinette's side and thrust his muzzle against her hand.

She did not snatch it away from him now.

They came to the slope, and Jeems forgot that Toinette was behind him. He walked straight down like a tall, thin ghost—and the girl stopped and stood alone, staring at the place where his home should have been, a cry wringing itself at last from her lips.

Jeems did not hear. He saw nothing but the clump of rose bushes and the place where his mother lay. He went to her first, oblivious of other presence, unconscious of the sun, of the ruins still smoldering, his soul stirring once more with the faint mad spark of incredulity. But she was dead. He saw her with clearer eyes, though he was sick with hurt. He knelt beside her calmly for a little while. He touched her face gently with his hand, and then went to his father. Odd trailed at his heels. In the stump field was a shovel. Under his mother's big tree he planned to dig.

When he returned, his mother was not alone. Toinette was there, on the ground, with the English woman's head in her lap. Her eyes blazed up at Jeems, and something like defiance was in them, something that was possessive and challenging and which hid whatever pity she might have had for him, or pleading for his forgiveness. Her hands were pressing the cold face of the woman she had wanted to hate, and she continued to look at Jeems, so hard, so terribly, so understandingly that she seemed almost to be waiting for him to punish her with a blow.

Then she bowed her head over his mother, and the shining veil of her hair covered death.

Under the big tree he began to dig.

It was late afternoon when they left the valley, a still, slumbering hour when the sun was about to go to its early rest, leaving glows and sunset paintings behind that might have been made of swimming metals.

Toinette's hand lay in Jeems' as they went.

They were like a young god and goddess ready to face the hazards of a savage world with a strength wrought out of fire. The sickness had left Jeems. His wounded arm was cared for by fingers as gentle as his mother's had been. Hot tears caressing his flesh from Toinette's dark lashes had cured his physical pain. Words spoken in a voice he had never heard from her lips entreating his forgiveness for years of misunderstanding were like the peace of the day itself about his heart. Out of ruin she had raised his soul to splendid heights of courage and resolution.

They passed his mother's gardens of flowers where choice blooms were nodding, filled to overflowing with ripening seeds; they skirted the turnip field where a purple-breasted crop lay waiting for spicy frosts to give crispness and flavor to its flesh. In a place where fresh dirt was scattered about were tools used yesterday—axes and shovels and hickory prying poles and the big double-bladed grub hoe which Hepsibah had made at Tonteur's forge. On a stump partly dug from the earth was one of Hepsibah's pipes made of half a cornucob with a hollow reed for a stem.

Jeems stopped and looked about, his throat almost tensing for the old familiar call to Hepsibah. But the stillness warned him. Like a friend it was whispering the sacredness of another trust. His eyes turned to the lovely head near his shoulder. In a moment Toinette raised her eyes to meet his, and even with his mother they had not been so deep and gentle.

"They must have caught my uncle out there," he said, keeping his voice steady and gazing over the forest tops of Forbidden valley. "He set the signal fire for us and then was killed. I would go and find him, if it were not for you."

"I will go with you," answered Toinette.

But Jeems turned west and did not look back at his home or betray the choking in his breast. He found himself talking to Toinette as if she were the child of the old days, and he, changed into a man, were explaining things. He described for the first time how the savages had come while he was on his way home from Lussan's place, and gave his reasons for believing they had departed in haste, leaving many things, like the gathered crops of fruit and grain, which they would surely have taken had they not been pressed by circumstance. He was sure they had not gone farther down the Richelieu but had turned back through Forbidden valley to the Mohawk country. Their own hope was to swing westward out of the path of stragglers, then eastward again toward Lussan's. Tomorrow or the day following, he would have her safely at the next seigneurie, and there she would find, means to be taken to her friends in Quebec. He would then join Dieskau to fight the English. The important thing was to reach Lussan's tonight. The Indians would not go near there, for they believed all abandoned places to be inhabited by ghosts and evil spirits. If they stumbled upon it by accident they would get away as quickly as possible.

He still held her hand as darkness gathered closer. In this gloom she whispered:

"Does you arm hurt, Jeems?"

"No. I had forgotten it."

"And your face—where I struck you?"

"I had forgotten that, too."

Something touched his shoulder lightly. He could not tell what it was, for they were in a pool of darkness. But whatever it might have been, a falling leaf, a twig, even shadow itself—it filled him with a strange exaltation. Out of the wreck of a world obliterated in a scourge of horror he had a soul beside his own to fight for.

Twice in the next hour Odd halted and gave a growl which warned of danger in the air. Jeems strained his eyes to see and his ears to hear—and once more, when they stopped to listen, he felt the gentle touch against his shoulder.

They struck a deer run and followed it into a plain between two lines of hills where a devastating fire had passed some years before. Here they traveled through a young growth of bushes and trees reaching scarcely above their heads, with the light of the stars falling on them. It stirred a soft radiance in Toinette's smooth hair and illumined Jeems' face until the wounds made by her hands were plainly revealed. They climbed the northernmost hill after a time, and at the top of it stopped again to rest.

Jeems, like Odd, stood tense and listening, searching the slumbrous distances of the wilderness which lay about them. He caught all movement and all sound, the direction of the wind, the shifting play of the shadows, the almost noiseless flutter of an owl's wings over their heads.

Roman Historian Wrote of "Noble" Caledonians

Picts is the name by which, for five and a half centuries—296 to 844 A. D.—the people that inhabited eastern Scotland, from the Forth to the Pentland firth, were known. In certain chronicles they are styled Picti, Pictones, Pictores, or Piccardaig—all forms of the same root; but sometimes the native Gaelic name of Cruithnig is applied to them, and their country called Cruithen-tuath, the equivalent of the Latin Pictavia and Old Norse Petland, which still survives in the name of the Pentland firth. In their wars in Britain the Romans came into collision with the Picts. One Roman or Latin writer of that time speaks of "the Caledonians and other Picts," which implies the inclusion of the former in the latter people. The well-known Roman historian, Tacitus, calls Scotland north of the Firths of Forth and Clyde, Caledonia, and he describes the Caledonians as a noble race of barbarians, who fight in chariots as well as on foot, with long swords and short shields, and whose fair red hair and large limbs argued a Teutonic origin. The Highlanders of today are of Celtic origin. The prefix, mac, meaning son of, is from the Gaelic.

Small Boy Honored

The little boy buried in Arlington cemetery and called the "Little Corporal," was the son of Sergt. Frank Lankton, General Pershing's orderly during the World war, and was always called Little Corporal by the general. He is buried in the civilian portion of the Fort Myer post section of Arlington.

ENTHUSIASM FOR ORGANDIE SEEN IN SPRING AND SUMMER STYLES

IMPORTANT in fashion's vocabulary for late spring and all summer is the word organdie. French designers, in their newest creations, have set the pace for others to follow in this matter of organdie, in that they employ it both formally and informally.

Leading couturiers are displaying in their salons stunning creations which reflect the elegant note in that they are fashioned of organdie richly worked with metal embroidery, posed in many instances over taffeta.

The tinted organdie frock posed over the taffeta slip is a favorite not wait, as it usually does, for summer to come ere it donned white. As a matter of fact the Easter parade played the initial number on the program of white which will continue during the late spring and summer months.

Not only is importance attached to white, as it pertains to accessory gloves and shoes, millinery and handbags, not forgetting to mention the inevitable scarf either of white flat fur or that which is newer still, the scarf of white taffeta which is tied in a sprightly butterfly bow, but the theme as it has to do with the formal mode. As to whether the taffeta be matched to the color of the dress or accent a contrast is left to choice.

Enthusiasm for organdie has led to a very happy number on the style program for the coming months—the hat-and-frock ensemble which is made entirely of organdie. A charming version of this smart mode is presented in the illustration. The dainty dress is just such as deb's and sub-deb's are wearing when they dine and dance. It is made of pale green organdie of bengberg. The bands which circle about the skirt and trim the bodice are formed by doubling the material.

Sans hat this lovely frock tunes to formal evening wear. Topped with its picturesque chapeau, which is made of the same bengberg organdie, this costume takes on a daytime air which suggests coming garden-party events.

The use of lace with organdie is notable this season. The winsomeness white coat of basket cloth and the frock of thin white wool worn under the dark coat, are making a spring debut.

Much is being said and done in couturier circles in regard to the white silk sports suit, with emphasis placed on the word white. The model pictured is of heavy white crepe. The jacket adopts a very smart styling in that it is double-breasted and belted. It also features a below-the-waistline placement for its two rows of buttons.

In the blouse worn with this suit one encounters the unexpected, in so far as color is concerned, for it is in a soft rose shade, which brings us to an important subject which has to do with the call of the mode for white with touches of bright color. The colored blouse with the white skirt or suit is an innovation which gives evidence of developing into a popular vogue. The short sleeve of the jacket (most of the jacket sleeves are short of this alliance of organdie and lace particularly registers in the field of design which has to do with frocks which the spring 1931 graduate will wear. Sometimes the organdie is posed over a lace slip.

Whitest of Seasons.

This promises to be one of the whitest seasons on record, so far as fashion is concerned. The interesting thing about the present vogue for white is that it began so early in the spring. The world of fashion did this season) reveals the rose sleeves of the blouse, thus imparting a really new detail to the costume.

An interesting fashion which has come to the fore is the white jacket with the dark skirt. Jackets of white flat crepe are being shown. These are washable which makes them practical. Jackets of white pique to be worn with the dark skirt or frock are also listed among smart fashions.

The attack of the Second French army, although made astride the Meuse river, was directed principally against Hill Mort Homme and Hill 304, both famous in the struggle of 1916. To destroy the wire entanglements and demolish trenches, as a precaution against heavy losses, the infantry assault was preceded by four days' continuous bombardment, and relatively the amount of artillery ammunition expended exceeded that of any previous engagement, its value being, as I remember it, some $75,000,000.

The proportion of the artillery force as compared to the infantry in this battle was as eleven to ten. The firing attained such precision and volume that the German troops in the forward positions were submerged and the attacking infantry reached most of its objectives by nightfall the first day, making an advance of five kilometers and capturing 6,000 prisoners.

The sector where the French attack took place was to have a peculiar interest for me before the end of the war. My headquarters as commander of the first army one year later occupied the building in Souilly, then used by Major General Guillaumat, and the line reached by Corvisart's troops in the battle became our jump-off line in the Meuse-Argonne battle. In fact, every foot of the ground covered in this inspection with General Petain became associated later with America's greatest effort in the war.

Petain's Contact Valuable.

After visiting the French installations and the manifold activities carried on behind this front with the shifting masses of combat troops and the thousands engaged in the services of supply and transportation, it seemed quite improbable that we should be able to marshal a sufficient army in time to replace the French on this front before 1919.

I found it most agreeable as well as instructive to be with Petain in this intimate way and have an opportunity to hear something of his experience. His discussion of the defense of Verdun, in which he played an important part, being second in command, was especially entertaining. As we drove about he spoke of the courage of his troops and of the tremendous losses they had sustained. He pointed out the vast amount of road work, including the Voie Sacree from Barle-Duc to Verdun, rebuilt under his direction for the constant movements of large bodies of troops and supplies necessary to maintain the defense.

In lighter vein his comments on French politicians during this trip were amusing, if not always complimentary, and he congratulated me many times on being so far removed from political interference. One afternoon the conversation drifted to painting, and he asked me how many times I had sat for his portrait. "Several times already," I said. "The last one, which was very good, was done by a distinguished artist by the name of Jonas (English Jonah) for 'Illustration'."

Immediately he said: "Don't let them publish it! Don't do it! Every officer whose portrait by Jonas has appeared in that journal has been relieved from his command."

Not that I am superstitious, quite the contrary, but I immediately forbade the publication of the portrait and to this day it has never appeared.

Builds Up French Morale.

From the time of Nivelle's failure in April the depression in the French armies had been so great that Petain, whom he handled with infinite patience and tact.

CHAPTER XII

In view of the gravity of our tonnage situation, it was highly important that it be brought forcibly to the attention of the allies. Apropos the approaching inter-allied conference on shipping, I cabled Washington August 23, 1917, in part as follows: "The British and, especially, the French have reached absolute limit of man power and any augmentation their military force cannot be expected. Imperative hasten our organization and training so that we will have the troops contemplated your project in Europe for active service by May or June."

"Military activities of allies on land should be strongly reinforced by combined navies and destruction U-boat bases accomplished if possible. High British army officers confidentially condemn waiting policy British admiralty. . . . In view of gravity of shipping question recommend our government insist upon aggressive policy by combined British and American navies. . . . Our position in this war very strong. . . . Allies now fully recognize dependence upon our co-operation and we need not hesitate demand both aggressive naval policy and full share commercial shipping. Recommend American representative shipping conference be instructed accordingly."

U. S. Advised on Powder Needs.

Meanwhile, a study by a joint French and American commission of the question of production of powders and explosives in France showed that the greater part of the raw materials must be imported and that, due to the shipping situation, France in December would produce only about half of the current output. It was apparent, therefore, that to avoid calamity the United States must not only furnish powder and explosives for all of its own forces, but must supply about half the French requirements. The War department was so advised.

By this arrangement a large saving of tonnage would be effected, as the weight of raw materials was ten to twenty times that of the finished product. As nitrates for the manufacture of powder and explosives had to be imported from Chile, the hazard to shipping would be reduced by avoiding the long haul to France. Millions of dollars were expended in the construction of plants at home in an attempt to produce nitrates, but none had been turned out before the end of the war.

Dawes Made Supply Chief.

In view of the uncertainty of obtaining more than a limited amount of ocean tonnage it was natural that we should procure abroad as large a proportion of supplies as possible, and our supply department began at once to make inquiries to meet the demands for construction material, subsistence stores and engineering equipment. Many sources of general supply had been developed by the French and we soon found ourselves not only in competition with them and the British but our different departments also began to bid against each other.

To my mind the solution seemed to be merely a matter of co-ordination. Therefore, I established a purchasing board to consist of one or more representatives of each service making purchases of any sort, including the Red Cross and Y. M. C. A.

Lieut. Col. Charles G. Dawes, Seventeenth engineers, well known as a man of large business experience, was appointed as the head of this board, which we placed greater dependence for our success.

It was apparent that we could not depend on the French without great risk of failure at a critical moment and it was evident that if we expected the maximum efficiency in this service we must provide our own personnel as well as additional locomotives and cars, all to be as far as practicable under American management.

With this plan in view commendable progress had been made toward both procurement and organization by Colonel Taylor, and complete estimates for rolling stock and construction at ports, terminals and yards, including an accurate survey of building and equipment requirements, had been made under his direction by Maj. W. J. Wilgus, formerly vice president of the New York Central, afterward a colonel, who had been a member of the Parsons board. These estimates without change served as a permanent guide for railway construction plans and material.

Creation of Transportation Corps.

As co-ordinate with the procurement and maintenance of material and equipment we were confronted with the vital question of organization for operation and management, but we had no officers in the regular service of sufficient experience in railway management to insure success. Therefore the evident course to pursue, to which the precedent of both British and French pointed the way, was to create a transportation corps immediately under the direction of some man of outstanding reputation in the railroad world. In accordance with the principle of obtaining the most competent men for important positions the following cable was sent July 29:

"Have made thorough study of railroad situation and am convinced that operation of railroads must be under man with large experience in managing railroads at home. Successful handling our railroad lines so important that ablest men in country should be selected. After almost disastrous results with inexperienced military men running railroads British selected ablest man could find to have charge transportation."

"Question here mainly one of physical operation and management in intimate relation with French, who retain general control, which is necessary to handle ordinary commercial traffic. Question of railroad transportation of course involves equipment, maintenance and new construction at front as army advances, and should be practically independent department, although nominally under engineers. Railroad chosen should be sent here without delay, together with three or four able assistants of his own selection. Later on it is believed these men should be given appropriate military rank."

In reply, the War department recommended W. W. Atterbury, then general manager and now president of the Pennsylvania railroad, for the place, and I immediately requested that he be sent to France.

CHAPTER XIII

The most important question that confronted us in the preparation of our forces of citizen soldiery for efficient service was training. Except for the Spanish-American war nearly twenty years before, actual combat experience of the regular army had been limited to the independent action of minor commands in the Philippines and to two expeditions into Mexico, each with forces smaller than a modern American division.

The World war involved the handling of masses where even a division was relatively a small unit. It was one thing to call 1,000,000 or 2,000,000 men to the colors, and quite another thing to transform them into an organized, instructed army capable of meeting and holding its own in battle against the best trained force in Europe with three years' actual war experience to its credit.

A general scheme of schools for the A. E. F. was prepared by the operations and training section, but in order that this instruction should be as complete and uniform as possible and at the same time be co-ordinated with other activities, I declared that training should be handled by officers who could devote their entire time to it. An additional section of the headquarters staff therefore was established, called the training section, to function under my personal direction. As chief of this section Col. Paul B. Malone was chosen, with Col. H. B. Fiske as his assistant.

The British methods of teaching trench warfare appealed to me very strongly. They taught their men to be aggressive and undertook to perfect them in hand-to-hand fighting with bayonet, grenade and dagger. A certain amount of this kind of training was necessary to stimulate the morale of troops by giving them confidence in their own personal prowess.

Through the kindness of Sir Douglas Haig we were fortunate early in our experience to have assigned to us Lieut. Gen. R. H. K. Butler and other officers of the British army to assist in this individual training.

Later on several French and British officers also came to lecture at a number of our schools.

We found difficulty, however, in using these allied instructors in that the French and, to a large extent, the British had practically settled down to the conviction that developments since 1914 had changed the principles of warfare. Both held that new conditions imposed by trench fighting had rendered previous conceptions of training more or less obsolete and that preparation for open warfare no longer was necessary. French publications and manuals were generally in accord with this theory.

If the French doctrine had prevailed our instruction would have been limited to a brief period of training for trench fighting. A new army brought up entirely on such principles would have been seriously handicapped without the protection of the trenches. It would probably have lacked the aggressiveness to break through the enemy's lines and the knowledge of how to carry on thereafter.

It was evident that the victory could not be won by the costly process of attrition, but that we should have to drive the enemy out into the open and engage him in a war of movement. Instruction in open warfare was based upon individual and group initiative, resourcefulness and tactical judgment, which were of equal advantage in trench warfare.

Therefore, we took decided issue with the allies, and, without neglecting thorough preparations for trench warfare, undertook to train mainly for open warfare, with the object from the start of vigorously forcing the offensive.

Rifle Practice Urged.

Intimately connected with the question of training for open warfare was the matter of rifle practice. The earliest of my cablegrams on this subject was in August, in which it was urged that thorough instruction in rifle practice should be carried on at home because of the difficulty of giving it in France:

"Study here shows value and desirability of retaining our existing small arms target practice course. In view of great difficulty in securing range in France due to density of the population and cultivation, recommend as fast as practicable the complete course be given in the United States before troops embark. Special emphasis should be placed on rapid fire."

My view was that the rifle and bayonet still remained the essential weapons of infantry, and my cable stressing the fact that the basic principles of warfare had not changed, were sent in an endeavor to influence the courses of training at home. Unfortunately, however, no fixed policy of instruction in the various arms, under a single authority, ever was carried out there.

Insensible to advice, the inclination was to accept the views of French specialists and limit training to the narrow field of trench warfare. Therefore, in large measure, the fundamentals so thoroughly taught at West Point for a century were more or less neglected.

The responsibility for the failure of the War department to take positive action on my recommendations in such matters must fall upon the military head of the department, which was the general staff.

There were other causes, as we shall see later, that led to confusion and irregularity in training to such an extent that we often were compelled during the last stages of the war to send men into battle with little knowledge of warfare and often with no rifle practice at all.

Military Police Provided.

The maintenance of good order among our troops under the peculiar conditions of service in France was most important, and for this purpose a military police was essential. Such a force, under the control of provost marshal general, corresponded to the police department in a well-organized city, except that its jurisdiction included only those in the military service. The British, whose situation was similar to our own, gave us helpful information regarding their system, which, with a slight modification, was adopted for our armies.

In our previous wars, the provost guard, so called, usually consisted of troops of the line detailed for the purpose, but without any special training for such duty.

Col. Hanson Ely was selected to organize the police corps and made a good beginning in laying the foundation, but, at his own request, he was shortly relieved and sent to regimental duty. His successor, Col. W. H. Alaire, became provost marshal general until the following July, when he was relieved by Col. J. C. Groome.

Brig. Gen. H. H. Bandholtz, on account of his special fitness for such work from his experience as chief of constabulary in the Philippine islands, became the permanent head of the corps in September, 1918.

Due credit must be given to each of these officers, but particularly to Bandholtz, for the smart appearance and the high efficiency of this force.

The military police were indispensable in directing and handling traffic during combat activities, in preventing straggling and in maintaining order among scattered groups of our armies both before and after the armistice.

The organization November 1, 1918, numbered 463 officers and 15,912 men, spread over the whole of France.

A LOW-COST GAS SERVICE FOR ALL

No Matter Where You Live You Can Light, Heat and Cook With Gas

It may seem strange, but it is true nevertheless, that while many city folks are complaining about high gas rates, thousands of rural folks are enjoying modern gas service for lighting, heating and cooking at low cost. Stranger still is the fact that these country residents are far from any gas mains.

Here's the answer: Along with the many other improvements for the farm and rural communities has come pressure gas appliances for the home. These new inventions have especially been a boon to the housewife. They lighten her work, save her time, and add no small measure of contentment to every member of the family.

Pressure gas appliances make and burn their own gas from regular untreated motor fuel. There are modern cook stoves that fry, bake or broil—roast, toast or boil, just like the regular city gas range. There are lamps and lanterns that produce 200 to 300 candlepower of pure white light; radiant heaters that produce healthful heat; self-heating irons without cords or tubes; water heaters, utility stoves, etc.

Inventive genius has made these appliances safe and dependable. They are complete in themselves. There are no pipes to connect up; no installation costs of any kind. They produce a clear, blue gas flame that is actually hotter than city gas.

In obtaining better light for all the family, easier cooking facilities, and quicker, cleaner heat through the use of these appliances, the modern farm housewife had bid good-bye to many old time drudgeries. No longer does she have to clean the old oil lamp chimneys and trim the wicks; no longer is there coal or wood to litter up the kitchen; or ashes to carry out; no more blackened pots and pans to scour. And on ironing day she no longer carries heavy sad-irons back and forth from stove to ironing boards.

That's real farm relief for the women folks!—Adv.

WOMEN SHOULD LEARN USES OF MAGNESIA

To women who suffer from nausea, or so-called "morning sickness," this is a blessing. Most nurses know it. It is advised by leading specialists:

Over a small quantity of finely cracked ice pour a teaspoonful of Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. Sip slowly until you are relieved. It ends sick stomach or inclination to vomit.

Its anti-acid properties make Phillips' Milk of Magnesia quick relief in heartburn, sour stomach, gas. Its mild laxative action assures regular bowel movement. Used as a mouthwash it helps prevent tooth decay during expectancy.

Castoria made especially for CHILDREN

CHILDREN usually hate to take medicine but every child loves the taste of Castoria. And mothers like its action—so gentle, yet so prompt and effective.

Castoria is a never-failing comfort to children and mothers alike because it was formulated expressly for children—to correct their little ills and upsets.

The beauty of it is you can give Castoria to children of all ages with equally sure results. When baby's cry warns of colic, a few drops of Castoria has him soothed; and free from pain, he is asleep again in a jiffy.

In an older child when coated tongue or bad breath tell of constipation, a more liberal dose is usually all that is needed to cleanse and regulate the bowels.

Your doctor will tell you Castoria deserves a place in the family medicine cabinet until your children are grown. He knows it is safe for the tiniest baby; effective for a child in his teens.

who succeeded him, had been content simply to hold the trenches, and no French offensive operation of consequence had been attempted until this one. From the moment of his assignment Petain began to build up the shattered morale of his armies and probably no other officer in France could have performed the task so well.

Petain's immense success in the defense of Verdun had won for him the confidence of the army and the country, and yet he remained the same modest, unassuming character, consistent and conservative. He, perhaps better than any other, understood the temperament of the French soldier, the members of which were to meet together and make known their respective needs and then agree among themselves as to where and by which department such purchase was to be made, thus mutually assisting instead of competing with each other. Under the arrangement co-operation with the French was established and the agency became increasingly effective in handling our procurement activities.
